Abbey Road Deluxe Edition Vol. One – The Mixes

23: The Ballad of John and Yoko (Lennon-McCartney)	(DESS UK singles + Anthology DVD)
24: Something (Harrison)	(Abbey Road + Anthology DVD)
25: Medley (Lennon-McCartney-Harrison)	(Anthology DVD)
26: Free As A Bird (Lennon-McCartney-Harrison-Starkey)	(Anthology DVD)

Ordinarily when we use Anthology DVD mixes we have to do a little editing at one or both ends and/or in the middle, just to clean it up. We don't normally mention it – we figured you'd just take it as given. The Ballad of John and Yoko uses more of the regular mix than usual. See if you can spot the join.

Anyway, this brings us to the end of the Beatles Studio Recordings. We'd be remiss if we didn't follow up with a Deluxe Christmas Collection, so look for that sometime, somewhere. Then on to the demos, which in hindsight should probably have been included in the deluxe editions; and the informal recordings, which should not. Dare we then tackle live shows and telecasts to finish off the Beatles' oeuvre?

Purple Chick Presents: The Beatles Deluxe Editions

Every available Beatles studio recording, in a somewhat organized album-by-album format.

Volume Ones showcased the original album – plus associated singles, E.P.s, compilation tracks and finished outtakes – in both stereo and mono. As a bonus – and we wouldn't blame you for turning your CDs off at this point – we threw in every alternate stereo and mono mix, plus other more-or-less appropriate goodies.

What this series didn't include was remixes derived from existing two-track mixes instead of from the multi-track tapes. Also, in the interests of avoiding redundancy, when an alternate mix consisted simply of a fragment of extra sound at the beginning or end, we edited it back into the bulk of the album. For example, while the hi-hat intro to "All My Loving" deserves a separate bonus track, the "whispering" intro to "I Feel Fine" doesn't. It's pretty arbitrary, but you'll have to cope.

Volume Twos showcased the Beatles at work in the studio through session tapes, acetates, outtakes, etc. Often, getting the complete session required editing from multiple sources – something we didn't shy away from. Surprisingly, many of these recordings have never appeared complete and at the correct speed before – of course, we fixed that. Also, while we like to stay away from noise reduction and eq, sometimes we expertly removed a little mains hum and other noises where appropriate.

We only included monitor mixes when they let us hear isolated tracks from the multi-track, or offered otherwise unavailable stuff. Also, we even threw in an outtake or two – but only if the circumstances warranted. Of course, we told when that happened.

Again, bear in mind, this series is only how we'd present this material. Your mileage may vary.

Finally, as always, Purple Chick discs are fan created and NEVER FOR SALE. Seriously – if you bought 'em you were ripped off. Somewhere down the line somebody sold what they acquired for free. Not cool.
